Lutherans Seek Way To Present Faith Anchors To Jews

The Lutheran Church in America's Commission on Evangelism announced the appointment of a five-member committee to study the most effective way of presenting Christianity to the Jews. The Rev. Reynold N. Johnson, director of the Commission, said that the study, reports the New York Times, "should lead Christian congregations to ways to include Jews in their concern, witness, and welcome."

The Christian church, Mr. Johnson said, has a "responsibility to understand both the Jewish people and their faith. Great numbers maintain no connection with the synagogue, are adrift from their religious heritage, floating in a religious vacuum, needing fresh anchors of meaning."

The study committee, headed by the Rev. Willis F. Erickson of Los Angeles, is scheduled to hold its first meeting in Chicago on September 25 and 26.

The Rev. Dr. Malvin H. Lundeen, secretary of the denomination, said that the study "proposes to deal with possible relationships to the Jewish community at the local level and will no doubt meet a real need for many of our congregations."

"In a pluralistic society in which the church must work," Dr. Lundeen said, "guidance is needed to assist congregations to relate to and serve the needs of every segment of the community in which they are located."

The members of the Committee beside Mr. Erickson are: the Rev. Dr. Conrad H. Hoyer, director of the National Council of Churches [illegible], Minnesota, the Rev. Dr. George W. Forell, a the-

Philistine Artifacts Dug Up At Ashdod Are In N.Y. Exhibit

An exhibition of small objects that loom large in penetrating the history of the Philistines, the mystery people of the Bible, is at the Jewish Museum, in New York. Vessels and cult figures in a sampling of artifacts recovered in excavations in 1962 and 1963 at the Biblical city of Ashdod in southern Israel, about eight miles from Tel Aviv, are on display.

The second largest archeological project in Israel, the Ashdod excavations are sponsored by United States and Israeli institutions, and employ about 250 staff members and workers. One of the largest-scale enterprises in the field, the Ashdod explorations have also employed an official photographer, an unusual addition in archeological ventures.

Customarily, expeditions press talented members of the archeological staff into photographic service.

The tiny objects on view at the museum, most of them of clay and dun-colored, benefit from enlarged photographs that are shown along with them. The collection is from a larger one made during the diggings by Ben Kortgold of New York.

The origin of the Philistines and their culture is still not clear. Some think they came from the Greek islands.

There are small ceremonial statuettes of human heads in the show and representations of Astarte, a goddess of fertility. However, the worship and ritual of the Philistines has not yet been determined.

Various areas have been investigated on the more than 90-acre site that Ashdod once occupied. The city was traced beginning with the Late Bronze back to about 1550 B.C., to the Arab and explored in various through phases

ARGENTINE HALF MILLION JEWS FEAR HOSTILITY AND SUSPICION CREATED BY ARAB LEAGUE AIDE

The Government is weighing the expulsion of a high official of the Arab League who has been accused of directing a hate campaign against Argentine Jews and Israel, a high official disclosed at Buenos Aires, says the New York Times. The contemplated Foreign Ministry action against Hussein Triki, acting head of the League office there, would be the first public move to counter the recent wave of anti-Semitism that Jewish community leaders believe is being promoted by Arab states in a worldwide drive to discredit Israel.

Mr. Triki, an Egyptian, has been conducting a campaign in which he portrays "international Zionism" as an ally of the Castro conspiracy in Latin America and in which he has questioned the loyalty of Argentine Jews toward their country.

The campaign has been conducted through press conferences, publications, and posters. It has drawn the increasing criticism of political leaders, the strongest being a demand by the provincial legislature of Cordoba that Mr. Triki be expelled. Firm police measures to repress anti-Semitism also were demanded.

The League office, representing thirteen Arab states, ostensibly complements diplomatic missions in spreading the idea of Arab-Latin American cooperation. But it has been accused of devoting its efforts almost exclusively to the denunciation of Jewish organizations, says the New York Times, as betrayers of Argentina's sovereignty.

The influence of the campaign was shown when a spate of charges in the League's monthly publication, Nacion Arabe, that Jewish civic groups and schools were plotting with Castro agents to subvert political and economic order, served as the basis last month for a demand by a Peronist deputy, Juan Cornejo Linares, that Congress investigate the loyalty of Jews working for the Government and look into the activities of these Jewish organizations.

The most impressive propaganda effort came after an explosion two weeks ago demolished four stories of a residential hotel, killing eleven persons. The explosion was caused by plastic bombs stored by a Communist cell, according to the police.

Mr. Triki called a press conference at which he said that the incident "fully confirms that a Zionist conspiracy is at work using Castro Communists as a cover." Simultaneously, Nacion Arabe posters were put up throughout the city charging Jewish complicity in the [illegible] and saying that Israel was behind the Argentine terrorists.

While the League campaign may have helped touch off such incidents as the very recent burning of an Israeli flag at a downtown intersection by youths believed to be members of the extremist Tacuara group, and the diffusion of anti-Semitic literature, Jewish leaders are much more fearful of the impact it is having in creating an atmosphere of suspicion and hostility toward Argentina's half million Jews.

Escaped Nazi S.S. Officer Gives Himself Up At Bonn

Hans-Walter Zech Nenntwich, the former S.S. officer who escaped in April from a German [illegible] and who made his way to Egypt, gave himself up to the German police in Hanover. In a statement he asserted his innocence, reports the London Times, and said he had returned voluntarily because he did not want to be "branded as a criminal in my own country".

The Lower Saxony Ministry of Justice said he had been arrested and taken to the new Hanover detention prison, which has the reputation of being one of the most secure in Germany.

Stern, the Hamburg illustrated weekly magazine which tracked down and photographed Zech-Nenntwich against the Pyramids, got on his trail again at Bonn. Herr Nannen, the editor, said that two reporters found that Zech-Nenntwich was in a Rhineland spa. About ten days ago, he said, the magazine had contact in Cairo with a woman friend of Zech-Nenntwich who accompanied him abroad.

The magazine said Zech-Nenntwich had flown from Cairo via Paris and Brussels to west Germany. It refused to name the airport at which he reentered the country.

Zech-Nenntwich was sentenced to four years' hard labour by the Brunswick Court for assisting in the murder of two Jews in Poland while belonging to an S.S. cavalry regiment during the war. Two days after sentence he escaped from prison and went by private hired aircraft to Switzerland.

The German Federal Government asked Egypt for his extradition, but to no avail. His escape caused concern at Bonn about the possible existence of a ring of former Nazis which organized escapes of incriminated colleagues, says the London Times. The authorities said, however, that they could find no proof of such a network.

HIGH COURT HOLDS ISRAELI RABBINATE SUBJECT TO REVIEW OF LAY AUTHORITY

Israel's High Court of Justice overruled rabbinical objections and held itself competent to examine decisions by the Supreme Rabbinical Council.

The rabbinate had maintained that decisions of the Supreme Council, the highest authority on the interpretation of religious law, were not subject to review by any lay authority because they were based on the law of God, reports the New York Times. The rabbinate was not represented in court. A memorandum explaining why it disputed the court's jurisdiction had been submitted earlier.

A panel of five justices, which sits only for test cases, said after hearing an opinion by Attorney General Moshe Ben Zeev that the rabbinate could not be allowed to set limits to the high court's competence.

The case concerned the rabbinate's refusal to supervise kosher slaughter at a new co-operative abattoir established by about two hundred cattle-raising settlements at Kfryat Malachi in southern Israel.

The rabbinate said the co-operative had refused compliance with its conditions. The co-operative said the rabbinical terms were unreasonable and filed suit. The case is to be heard on September 1.

The slaughterhouse is operating under the supervision of a rabbi who has been refused recognition by the official rabbinate. The products are being marketed in Tel Aviv and the southern part of the country and the rabbinate has withdrawn kosher certificates from some retailers who have been handling beef.

Scrupulously observant Jews have therefore declined to purchase products of the abattoir.

The monopoly of the Orthodox rabbinate over religious life in Israel was attacked at the third annual "Dialogue in Israel", sponsored by the American Jewish Congress.

The attack was started in a keynote address by Dr. Joachim Prinz, of New York, a Reform rabbi and president of the Congress. He said Israel could not expect American Jews to settle in Israel if the religious authorities questioned the authenticity of their Jewish observance and did not accept the rulings of their rabbis and teachers.

Dr. Prinz was alluding to no recognition of Reform and Conservative rabbis as competent to perform marriages and divorces and to interpret Biblical law. Other American and Israeli members of GOING TO THE WORLD'S FAIR?

Take home an extra measure of pleasant memories with a refreshing and thoroughly delightful stay at BROWN'S, only 90 minutes from the fairgrounds.

If the night life at Kutsher's were any more lively, you'd have to go to Las Vegas for a rest.

We get some pretty tough customers at Kutsher's. They hate to go to sleep at night. Vacations are for fun, cha cha cha.

So, cha cha cha, for the summer, we're featuring a few entertainers who eat tough audiences for breakfast: Red Buttons, Jackie Mason, George Kirby, Allen & Rossi.

Plus a lot of supporting talent.

Plus 4 bands that never stop, cha cha cha.

Plus Don Lazar, the most unbusinesslike bartender in the business. (We may lose a little on every drink he serves but we make it up in volume.)

(All of this goes on 7 nights a week.)

Since we're running out of space, we're not going to mention our daytime activities such as golf, boating, swimming, fishing, tennis, and all day supervision of the kids. We'll mention them another time.

Zionist Organization Of Canada Announces Mortgage Loan Fund For Canadians In Israel

The Zionist Organization of Canada announces that it has completed arrangements with the General Mortgage Bank, 3 Abuzat Bait, Tel-Aviv, to provide mortgages on homes anywhere in Israel for Canadian Olim from September, 1, 1964. Mortgages can be for up to sixty percent of the value of a home to a maximum of I.L. 24,000 and may run for up to fifteen years with the option of no principal payments for the first three years. Loans will be index-linked and bear interest at eight percent.

In order to qualify for these special terms the applicant must prove that he or she was born in Canada; holds a Canadian passport; or lived in Canada for a period of five years or more.

A committee to represent the Zionist Organization of Canada in Israel will consist of four Canadians: Lionel Freeman, of Haifa; Edward Gelber, and Dr. Samuel Hurwich, of Jerusalem; and Manny Kraicer, of Tel-Aviv. The Association of Canadians and Americans in Israel has also volunteered to help applicants with their applications.

D. Lou Harris, the Canadian chairman of the Z.O.C. Mortgage Loan Fund, stressed that applicants need not use the services of the Association or the Committee unless they wish to and that arrangements have been made with the bank to keep red tape to a bare minimum as is the custom in Canada. Mr. Harris expressed the hope that the Zionist Organization's Mortgage Loan Fund operated by the General Mortgage Bank in Israel would lead to increased immigration from Canada, and that the Government of Israel would try to assist it by easing some of the existing restrictions and difficulties. He also expressed the thanks of his committee to the Economic Department of the Jewish Agency without whose assistance the fund might never have come into existence.

FEDERATIONS AND CIVIL RIGHTS

many of our Federations in problems of public welfare is a healthy sign.

We are beginning to join actively as Jewish Federations, and not only as individual Jews, in the hard struggle for more humane relief standards, improved educational systems, better care for the aged and the ill, taking advantage of liberalized amendments to the social security system. Tomorrow we will be asked to extend our interest to such problems as city-county relationships, urban renewal, persistent unemployment and job retraining, and proper legislative representation for the cities.

Of course we shall have to choose those issues where we can make our most effective contribution, nor can Jewish Federations become involved in every social problem. On particular issues, Federation may find it inappropriate or impossible to become involved in its own name, and may prefer to interest individual Jewish leaders in the rescue efforts of the central city.

But encouraging such individual participation must be worked at; it does not always happen spontaneously. And we have become skillful in encouraging leadership in all sorts of good works. In many communities, for example, we have been of great help to universities and community colleges without becoming formally involved as a Federation (or even as Jews, officially) in their campaigns for improved facilities and more operational funds. The technique is of lesser significance; the recognition of the need for action is crucial.

For a great opportunity is at hand: Our fathers and grandfathers contributed in historic measure to the great domestic issue of the first half of the century — the establishment of decent and dignified standards for workingmen. No account of the emergence of the trade union movement, of the revolution in American thinking of the relations between management and labor is complete without reckoning with the Jewish role in this historic development.

Now our people have moved largely into business and the professions, where they are effectively positioned to contribute to resolving the great domestic issues of the latter years of the century — not only inter-racial justice, but the related questions of the various agonies of the central city, the relation of private and public enterprise, chronic unemployment, meaningful use of leisure time, health and welfare problems of all kinds.

Can we not find ways to harness the demonstrated dynamic leadership of our communities — so evident in our dramatic Welfare Fund campaigns and our own communal planning — in the major economic and social problems of our great cities.

The view here taken goes beyond civil rights as they are usually conceived. But the historic march on Washington was for jobs and rights. Like most slogans, that was a simplified and short-hand way of saying something more complicated: That rights mean little unless they are securely anchored economically; that social justice implies social welfare; indeed, that our concerns must be not merely for Negroes, but for people; not merely for rights, but for needs.

And here is where Federation — or more precisely, the Jewish community with the encouragement and aid of Federation — can be of great use. Not so much by passing formal resolutions (though occasionally, that has importance too) but by direct involvement in public welfare and broad concern with the bread and butter issues of the heart communities where we live.

If the security of the Jewish community does indeed rest on the strength of the democratic fabric, then Community Relations Council cannot do the job alone. Their chief responsibility is in the important area of rights. But the superstructure of civil rights must in the final analysis rest on firm economic and social foundations. And here the Federation has the privilege, with wisdom and patience but with imagination too, to make its contribution to an ancient Jewish and American tradition of concern for all mankind.

of the following Iron Age, the Persian, Hellenistic, Roman and Byzantine periods.

One of the great prizes uncovered was a basalt stele, which was erected as a pedestal to a statue of Sargon II of Assyria when he conquered Ashdod in 713 B.C. Mass graves that were found with scores of heaped skeletons were ascribed to Sargon's conquest. The royal victory stele was the first to be found in Palestine.

Ashdod and its vicissitudes figure with some prominence in the Bible, which until recent times, has been the main source of its history.

Non-Biblical information about Ashdod went back to the 11th century B.C. until recently discovered documents gave insights into the 13th century and 14th century B.C. In these periods Ashdod appears as a bustling community, thriving on an export trade in textiles.

Originally a walled city, Ashdod suffered four violent destructions, according to evidence on the site. Two are recorded in the Old Testament.

Sponsors of the excavations are the Israel Department of Antiquities, the Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, and the Carnegie Museum of Pittsburgh.

the panel also attacked the prohibition of civil marriage in Israel as a form of religious coercion.

Brig. Gen. Shlomo Goren, senior chaplain of the armed forces, held that civil marriage and divorce would split the nation forever. Even if it were to be tried for only one generation, he said, the damage would be irreparable because the children of observant Jews would be prevented from marrying children of non-observant ones.

ARGENTINE HALF MILLION JEWS FEAR HOSTILITY AND SUSPICION

The campaign has begun to create concern within the government. Until recently it took the position that the issue was being over-emphasized by Jewish leaders. President Arturo U. Illia promised a delegation of Progressive Democratic party officials that he would speed changes in the rules of criminal procedure that would enable the Government to outlaw the Tacuara and other rightist groups posing a threat to peace.

Interior Minister Juan Palmero said he was studying the recent anti-Semitic outbreaks to determine how they could be avoided.

Glazed Butterscotch Swirls

When you bake at home use Fleischmann's Fast Rising Dry Yeast for results you can count on! Try this simple recipe yourself. You'll love these delicious Glazed Butterscotch Swirls.

GLAZED BUTTERSCOTCH SWIRLS
Yield: 27 Swirls

1. Scald 1½ cups milk; stir in ½ cup granulated sugar, 2 tsps. salt and ½ cup shortening. Cool to lukewarm.

2. Measure ½ cup lukewarm water into a large bowl. Stir in 2 tsps. granulated sugar and sprinkle with 2 envelopes Fleischmann's Fast Rising Dry Yeast. Let stand 10 mins., then stir well. Stir in lukewarm milk mixture, 2 well-beaten eggs and 3 cups pre-sifted all-purpose flour. Beat until smooth and elastic. Work in sufficient additional flour to make a soft dough—about 3¼ cups more. Knead dough on floured board until smooth and elastic. Place in greased bowl. Grease top. Cover. Let rise in warm place, free from draft, until doubled in bulk—about 1¼ hours.

3. Cream together ½ cup butter or Blue Bonnet Margarine, ½ cup corn syrup and 2 cups lightly-packed brown sugar. Spread half this mixture on bottom of 3 greased 8- or 9-inch square cake pans. (Mixture will not completely cover bottom of pans.)

4. Punch down dough. Turn out and knead until smooth. Divide into 3 equal portions. Roll out 1 portion into an 11¼ inch square; spread with ⅓ of remaining brown sugar mixture. Roll up jelly-roll fashion; cut into nine, 1¼ inch slices. Arrange slices, a cut side up, in a prepared pan. Repeat with remaining portions of dough. Grease tops. Cover. Let rise until doubled in bulk—about 40 mins. Bake in preheated moderately hot oven (375°) 25 to 30 mins.

FEDERATIONS AND CIVIL RIGHTS

By Sidney Z. Vincent, associate director of the Jewish Community Federation, of Cleveland, Ohio, writing in The Jewish Community, publication of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds, which holds the copyright and grants permission to reprint here.

Times of national emergencies are always times of agonizing reappraisal. But perhaps no peace time emergency since the depression has forced so sweeping a re-examination of traditional methods of operation by all sectors of American society as the present crisis in civil rights.

It is almost unthinkable that the Jewish Federations of the country, so intimately involved with the Jewish civic enterprise on the one hand and increasingly with the general life of the community on the other, can escape for long an examination — or re-examination — of their role in this passionate national emergency.

Indeed, for some Federations that examination has already been forced by the sheer press of events. What are usually referred to as "community relations problems" have moved front and center in most Southern Jewish communities, as explosive civil rights problems increasingly impinge on contributor, agency board member, congregational leader, and finally, almost every member of the community.

As the problems spread with [illegible] speed to all points of the compass, no Federation can long remain immune to the necessity for coming to some kind of terms with the issue of how it shall relate to the movements and demands and "creative tension" (in Martin Luther King's phrase) that are constantly churning to the surface everywhere, North as well as South.

The problem is almost nowhere a matter of ideology. Almost every Jewish agency, national or local, is committed philosophically to freedom of opportunity for all Americans — because of our historic experience as a people, the traditions of Judaism, and the conviction that the security of our people rests finally on the strength and vigor of our democracy.

But against these powerful drives toward participation in the great civil rights issues are strong counter tendencies centered around the key question, "Are these Jewish issues?" And, more specifically, "Are they Federation issues?"

And no responsible community leader, in his personal enthusiasm for playing a role in so key a struggle, can properly discount the strong and deeply felt reservations inevitably advanced against Federation participation.

These reservations include, among others, these two prime considerations: This is a matter for the religious conscience (rabbis, congregations) and for the Community Relations Councils, that are directly charged with responsibility in this field . . . The prime obligation of Federation is to harness the forces of the community to meet the needs of the Jewish community at home and abroad, and injection of so explosive and divisive an issue, only peripherally related to Federation's central responsibilities, would be a vast disservice.

Each of these contentions deserves serious and respectful consideration.

As to the first ("This is not Federation business"), the living facts of community life are making such a policy of assignment of exclusive responsibility increasingly difficult to maintain. The struggle for full citizenship touches all institutions — Jewish or general — so intimately as to involve Federation, whether or not it wishes involvement.

Federation by definition is a union of agencies for common purposes; those agencies render certain services to the general community and usually are in part supported by the general community. They cannot escape — nor can the Federation itself escape — the nagging questions that are being more and more insistently put:

If there is a Jewish hospital, how shall its professional staff be appointed? How shall its patients be assigned to rooms? Shall its board in any way reflect its clientele, increasingly Negro?

If there is a Jewish community center, to what extent shall its services be available to the non-Jewish community? Shall it become involved in programs of social action, as part of its basic educational program?

Shall Jewish communal schools undertake programs of intercultural education, so urged by our CRC's in the public schools?

How shall Federation respond to the increasingly articulate demand that construction of new buildings shall require non-discriminatory pledges by builders and contractors?

Shall the investment of Federation funds be determined not only by the rate of return and traditional economic safeguards, but human safeguards too? That is, should community money be deliberately invested in non-discriminatory projects or institutions?

Do we have a position when the Community Fund to which we belong deliberates on whether to continue its support of the Urban League?

What of the responsibilities implied in use of Hill-Burton moneys?

The examples could be multiplied almost indefinitely. Problems of this nature are becoming all-pervasive. In the words of the old spiritual, "There's no hiding place down there." Sooner or later, stands will have to be taken. For even silence and evasion are themselves acts, as so many observers have pointed out. In today's social context, abstention is a vote against change; in effect, against civil rights.

The second contention, that these issues can disrupt the community, is certainly a valid caution. Needless controversy is certainly to be avoided. But blandness is also a danger. The Jewish communal enterprises can be overprotected to the point where its growth is inhibited, and where it becomes irrelevant to the great issues of the day.

The genius of communal leadership is to move a community from where it is to where its most responsible and fertile minds aspire for it to go. Those who neglect reckoning with where the community is (its traditions, its resistance to change) may find themselves leaders without followers.

But those who neglect aspiring to ever higher, more difficult goals forfeit the role of leaders altogether. Nor are they effectively fulfilling their essential Jewish purpose, which requires maximum involvement, within necessary limitations, in this great social struggle.

To move from philosophical generalities to specific actions: What then can a Federation meaningfully and appropriately do in the civil rights crisis?

First, it can survey its own practices and those of its constituent agencies (together with those agencies, to be sure) to assure that it is utilizing every opportunity to achieve the maximum, not the minimum, in progressive intergroup relations. (Some wag has suggested, out of a conviction that Federations tend to over-emphasize the need for caution, that the slogan should be, "Don't scare; dare!")

All the questions about agency and Federation practices raised earlier have obvious answers that point the way toward interracial progress. Most of our agencies have probably been "better than most" in their patterns of employment and provisions of service, but there is still a distance to travel before we can honestly say, "We are Jewish agencies and therefore some of our jobs and some of our services must obviously be sectarian. With this limitation, we are not only non-discriminatory; we earnestly seek to employ and serve all sections of the community."

These are rather easy admonitions, and I do not have the space to repeat the many additional practical and helpful suggestions contained in the National Community Relations Advisory Council's brochure reporting the work of its Reassessment Conference on the respective roles of community relations and other Jewish agency services.

Rather, I should like to focus on a single prime potential for Federation activity, only beginning to be explored. I take as my point of departure the sometimes overlooked fact that inter-racial relations have in reality for many years already tremendously affected Federations and their agencies, in the most practical way.

First, Jewish community subventions to Jewish hospitals, to Jewish community centers, day nurseries, and vocational services, to say nothing of community relations agencies, have been in significant measure in many cities a contribution to the Negro community. A change in the status of that community inevitably will affect our contribution.

More important, the movement of so many Jewish community facilities from the central city to the suburbs, entailing so much investment of funds and so much dislocation of services, is due in part (though only in part) to the explosive growth of the Negro community.

Nor are these forces completed. Some cities are still in the early stages of this outward shift. Others, that have practically completed the move to the suburbs, will soon find (if they have not already) that one result of the civil rights struggle is the inevitable outward move of Negroes who are steadily climbing up the socio-economic ladder. What are we to do? Move again, with fantastic renewed capital expenditures and dislocation of services such a move implies?

Good economic sense as well as good community relations dictates staying put, avoiding panic, accepting cheerfully and constructively the thesis that no neighborhood can be, or should be, "safe."

But panic and desertion of neighborhoods cannot be avoided only by preachment or even sophisticated education, important as these tools may be. A more basic social force is involved. Our central cities continue to decay while the best minds flee to the dormitory communities, where they have no direct stake in the problems of the mother metropolis.

Under such circumstances, the drive outward becomes irresistible. And no wonder, with overcrowded schools, slums, inferior housing, high crime rates, growing relief costs, poor health conditions, and increasing resistance to additional taxes.

We have a profound stake, both idealistic and "selfish", in combating such conditions, for stability in all neighborhoods can come only when there are conditions that make stability possible in the central city. And so, I believe the fairly recent active interest of
